Not illustrated. 1895 Excerpt: ... 1853 by the American Bishop MacIlvaine, By an awkward eontretenzps, Bishop Sumner chose for his morning text that which Bishop MacIlvaine had selected for the evening. MacIlvaine had thus a change forced upon him, and but scanty time to prepare for it. But his hearers were probably gainers rather than losers, for we are told that his extempore words were couched in a strain of affectionate earnestness which touched every heart, and drew forth many tears. Among many less distinguished men, Bishop Ryle, Bishop Wordsworth (of St. Andrews), Frederic Robertson, and Dr. Sewell, the Venerable Warden of New College, Oxford, were ordained here. The remainder of the interior of the castle will not detain us long. The state apartments in Bishop Foxs tower are simply comfortable modern rooms. Much the same character may be given to the family rooms in Bishop Morleys wing. The old dining-room on the first floor has been converted into the bishops library, where he sits surrounded by wellstored bookselves, and the portraits of some of his greatest predecessors--Gardiner, Andrewes, Wilberforce, and Harold Browne, looking down on him. Photographs of Phillips Brooks, and the Apostle of the Red Indians, Bishop Whipple of Minnesota, on his writing-table, serve as memorials of Bishop Thorolds many visits to the New World. The adjacent apartment, formerly the study, now the private dining-room, is hung with family portraits. One is by Reynolds; ano is of the good Sir /-/// john Thorold, the S friend of Wesley and Doddridge, a light shining in a dark age. Another, by Chamber-lain, is of his father. In the story above is a long apartment--in Bishop Sumners time called the gallery...
