

Di: ISLAND EXCLUSION TO (n.ITYS IU KC i. The pei-fions named in the resolution were appointed committes by their respective Associations at the reunions held in tinsuinn-ic f18S), to procure suitable memorials and cause them to be erected on the battlefield of Gettysburg, and before the end of June, 1880, all the memorials had been placed in position ready for dedication. That of the Second Rhode Island Volunteers cost one thousand dollars, the Association having added five hundred dollars to the amount appropriated by the State, while the three batteries limited the cost of their memorials to the amount of the State appropriation. Those of the Second Rhode Island Volunteers and Batteries A and E, were designed and constructed by the Smith (John Comjiany of Westerly, but that of Battery B was the workmanship of John Flaherty of Niantic. The memorial of the Second Rhode Island Volunteers is eight feet six inches high, and consists of a square monument of West-rly granite, simple in form, with sharp, well-defined outlines, supporting a bronze group of military devices. The ground base is four and a half feet square and eighteen inches high, with a rough quarried surface, while all the other surfaces are fine hammered. The second base, which is three feet ten inches square and one foot eight inches high, has a deep wash or sloping surface from its upper edge or junction with the principal stone. In bold relief on the front of this base is the Sixth Corps badge and this sunken inscription, "July 1 and 2, 1863. This is the site of the battle of Gettysburg, where the Army of the Potomac, under the command of General Meade, defeated the Army of Northern Virginia, under the command of General Lee, on July 1, 2, and 3, 1863. The ground on which the battle was fought is now a part of the National Park of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania." (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
