The Book of Job -

The Book of Job is one of the Writings of the Hebrew Bible, and the first poetical book in the Christian Old Testament.

Addressing the theme of Gods justice in the face of human suffering - or more simply, Why do the righteous suffer? - it is a rich theological work, setting out a variety of perspectives. It has been widely and often extravagantly praised for its literary qualities - The greatest poem of ancient and modern times, according to Tennyson, and the only book of the Bible on one list of The 100 Best Books of All Time.

Job laments the day of his birth; he would like to die, but even that is denied him. His three friends Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite and Zophar the Naamathite, console him. The friends do not waver in their belief that Jobs suffering is a punishment for sin, for God causes no one to suffer innocently, and advise him to repent and seek Gods mercy. Job responds with scorn: a just God would not treat him so harshly, patience in suffering is impossible, and the Creator should not take his creatures so lightly, to come against them with such force.

God speaks from a whirlwind. His speeches neither explain Jobs suffering, nor defend divine justice, nor enter into the courtroom confrontation that Job has demand, nor respond to his oath of innocence. Instead they contrast Jobs weakness with divine wisdom and omnipotence: Where were you when I laid the foundations of the earth? Job makes a brief response, but Gods monologue resumes, never addressing Job directly. In 42:1-6 Job makes his final response, confessing Gods power and his own lack of knowledge of things beyond me which I did not know; previously he has only heard, but now his eyes have seen God, and therefore I retract/And repent of dust and ashes.
