

Working Together in Child Protection: An Exploration of the Multi-Disciplinary Task and System

This text is designed as a resource for all practitioners, students, managers and trainers who work in the child protection field. It explores the detailed working arrangements of the child protection system and examines the roles and perspectives of the agencies and practitioners who make up that system. It suggests that multi-disciplinary child protection work is both complex and difficult, claiming that a series of structural blockages exist to effective joint working, in particular that we all harbour an ignorance of the perspective and reality of the other agencies and practitioners within the system. The work goes on to propose a number of measures to be taken by practitioner, agency and government departments that will promote multi-disciplinary working at all levels, suggesting that good multi-disciplinary communication, co-operation and action is synonymous with good child protection work. The child protection system in England and Wales is used as a case study, but comparisons are drawn with child protection systems in other parts of the world. It is argued that the key concepts and conventions of effective multi-disciplinary child protection work are constant and go beyond the boundaries of single systems.
